Dana VUCKOVIC is a fourth-year PhD student at the University of Oxford, conducting research under the co-supervision of Professors Carole Bourne-Taylor and Tim Farrant. Her thesis, “The Construction of Balzac as a Classic Writer: Serialization, Education, Publishing, and Adaptation: From his Beginnings to the Present”, explores the sociocultural implications of the terms ‘classic’ and ‘popular.’ It examines how Honoré de Balzac’s rise to canonical status was shaped by serialized fiction, educational institutions, pocket editions, and adaptations for television and film, solidifying his status as a ‘classic’ while maintaining his broad popular appeal. After spending her second year in Paris, where she taught English at Université Paris-Nanterre, and a semester at Université de Fribourg under the aegis of Professor Michel Viegnes, she has returned to Oxford to complete her thesis, which she expects to defend by the end of 2025. In addition to her research, Dana leads seminars on French cinema and Advanced French translation at Oxford.

Dana has published several book reviews in Oxford University Press, Liverpool University Press, and Studi francesi. She has also recently submitted two peer-reviewed articles: ‘Le duo/duel psychologique entre Stéphanie de Vandières et Philippe de Sacy : la dimension scientifique et romanesque de la folie dans Adieu’ to L’Année balzacienne, and ‘Du récit bref balzacien au long-métrage : réimagination d’Une passion dans le désert à travers le double, la violence sanguinaire et l’approche écocritique’ to Le Carrefour des Lettres Modernes.
